I will make a great International Students' Officer because I have the experience and knowledge to help international students, such as myself, to adapt to their new home and be comfortable in the dealing where help is often appreciated. Normally I am comfortable with community involvement positions, such as my previous position of President of a club dealing with community outreach club in the US. However, after moving the UK previously for an internship and to Germany for my Masters, I have become acquainted with different strategies for coping with foreign policies and dealing with university offices, along with feeling welcome in the new country. By electing me as the IS Officer, I can work to ensure that our internationals 'bumpy' road to a degree has only to do with the work itself and not the bureaucracy. I will also work in coordination with other officers to perform the essential role of getting them involved in the community; college, university and/or the country itself.

I would make a good consultant with the committee for health and safety because I have been involved with medical education and community awareness since I was a kid. I started in high school, as president of a community outreach club where I would oversee the engagement with young kids and other people in the community and raise funds for different organizations active in promoting causes we believed in. One event in specific we would routinely do is care for a hospital care center to ensure the place is clean and have the best care. I then left this position to focus on studies in physiology and molecular biology, as well as becoming involved in not only research (at the Radcliffe department of medicine) but also in the medical device industry. I worked with W.L.Gore & Associates for many temporary positions during my bachelors. I then proceeded to complete my masters degree with the German Cancer Institute in Heidelberg. I am now continuing my education with the department of medicine at the John Radcliffe Hospital, working to develop a means of drug screening for cardiac patients using stem cells derived from the patient themselves. My experience in medicine, and specifically my work with the medical device industry, can provide a unique position on the committee for health and safety to better inform our students.

I'm applying for the position as Graduate Women's Officer because I am passionate about promoting and working for graduate women across the university. I'm currently a student on the Mst Women's Studies course and have previously worked for the United Nations (Sexual Violence in Conflict Zones) and UNESCO (Gender Equality Division). Having addressed the entire Human Rights Council at the age of 21, I am certainly not afraid to speak out and work for what I believe in! My personal projects include:

- Women of colour's mental health. This is already a huge issue but it faces a particularly huge stigma as far as WOC are concerned.
- Periods and pregnancy - providing support for graduate parents but also support for those who have difficult decisions to make. It suddenly becomes a very pertinent issue for the Grad Women's Officer when you consider that of the 1 in 3 women who have abortions, the average age statistically is 22.
- Improving access to survivor support services and making it very clear who to contact in the case of aggression or harassment, of any form. I will work for college specific policies that are clearly laid out.
- Addressing specific issues facing women in the education system, particularly at graduate level. I do not believe that women can completely access feminism until they can access education, and we need to be lifting all barriers to promote equality of opportunity.
- In college/inter-college workshops/networking - career related as well as personal development.
